Just a Matter of Time: a Time Travel Romance T. Michelle

When down-on-herself Rebecca Fowley traipses after a small, intriguing insect and on to the private property of heart-hardened rancher Elias Dellin, confusion and attraction abound. Rebecca is certain that she's just become turned around in the brush by the highway and Elias is just as sure that she's 45 miles away from the nearest town. Convinced to return with him to the family farm, Rebecca encounters Elias' all-seeing but completely blind grandmother, Aurora, and a scene right out of an old western. But her first assumptions that the family is part of a strange society of re-enactors are wiped clean when Elias adamantly assures her that the year is 1843. Rebecca knows this can't be true; when she parked her car to stretch her legs it was 1999. But just because their birthdays are separated by 165 years doesn't mean it can't work, especially with a couple of ethereal beings on their side.
